

Tenaya Jackman, MPH

Tenaya Jackman, MPH is the Cancer Control Strategic Partnerships Manager for the Hawaii Pacific office of the American Cancer Society. She focuses on preventing cancer by improving colorectal cancer screening and increasing HPV vaccination rates through work with statewide networks, coalitions and providers. A graduate of the University of California, Berkeley, School of Public Health, Tenaya has over 25 years of experience promoting primary care, addressing health disparities and improving access through health policy and public health at the federal, state and non-profit levels, and as an independent midwife. She has begun teaching mindfulness meditation to enhance well-being. She has been an active participant in HPHA.